Editor's note: I read this recently, and thought it made a witty and amusing newsletter filler.

Subject and verb always has to agree.

Do not use a foreign term when there is an adequate English quid pro quo.

It behooves the writer to avoid archaic expressions.

Do not use hyperbole; not one writer in a million can use it effectively.

Avoid cliches like the plague.

Mixed metaphors are a pain in the neck and should be thrown out the window.

Placing a comma between subject and predicate, is not correct.

Parenthetical words however must be enclosed in commas.

Consult a dictionary frequently to avoid misspelling.

Don't be redundant. Don't repeat yourself or say what you have said before.

Remember to never split an infinitive. The passive voice should not be used.

Proofread carefully to see if you any words out.

Never use a long word when a diminutive one will do. Avoid colloquial stuff.

No sentence fragments. Remember to finish what...
